Psychology GIVING

APF Awards $60K in Child Psychology Fellowships

The American Psychological Foundation's Elizabeth Munsterberg Koppitz Fellowship Program, now in its third year, has awarded three $20,000 fellowships and five $5,000 travel stipends to graduate students for their up-and-coming research in child development. The 2005-2006 recipients are as follows:

DAVID A. BEAULIEU

David A. Beaulieu, of the University of California, Santa Barbara, will investigate how early exposure to adversity, coupled with positive maternal behavior, can lead to extraordinary resilience or promise for children. Beaulieu's research focuses on decision rules associated with parental investment and the psychological and physiological resilience of children to early adversity. "Given the community-based nature of this type of research, funding is a necessity," says Beaulieu. "Without funding sources like the Koppitz fellowship, science would not and could not advance."

ANDREW M. TERRANOVA

Andrew M. Terranova, of the University of New Orleans, will continue a longitudinal project examining the relationship between the way victims and witnesses respond to bullying and bullying rates. Terranova will conduct a 24-month follow-up on 275 fourth grade students currently participating in his dissertation research project. "This fellowship will allow me to continue my research and to continue working with local schools to reduce bullying and school violence," Terranova says. He believes his research will provide interesting information on the peer group processes that reward children for their involvement in bullying and the amenability of these processes to intervention efforts.

KSENIYA YERHOVA

Kseniya Yershova, of the University of California, Berkeley, will research resilience and competence in children. Her objective in understanding resilience is to "strive to preserve unity of cognitive, emotional, and social aspects of development and therefore focus on protective factors that reflect this complexity." Yershova was part of several University of Massachusetts research teams investigating intervention programs for underserved children. She participated in a literacy program sponsored by USAID and the World Bank in which she helped develop and implement training, instruction and evaluation materials in Burkina Faso, Africa, and Haiti. Working with at-risk children deepened her understanding of both human despair and human resilience, particularly her faith in people's internal resources in the face of environmental adversity.

The three fellowship recipients will present their research at the 2006 Elizabeth Munsterberg Koppitz Workshop on Child Psychology. The following five students will receive $5,000 travel stipends to attend the workshop and other child psychology conferences:

Melanie A. Dirks, a graduate student in the clinical psychology program at Yale University. Her research focuses on social competence among economically disadvantaged children.

Yarrow Dunham, a doctoral student in the human development and psychology program at Harvard's Graduate School of Education. His work recruits theoretical perspectives from developmental and cognitive psychology to better understand the acquisition of social group concepts.

Former President of Ireland to deliver Weiss Lecture

Mary Robinson will discuss bridging the language of human rights and development at the Foundation's Lynn Stuart Weiss Lecture on the Study of Peace, Conflict, and Violence at the 2005 APA Convention on Friday, August 19, from 1:00 p.m. to 1:50 p.m. in Meeting Room 207A of the Washington Convention Center.

MARY ROBINSON

Robinson was the first woman President of Ireland (1990-1997) and more recently United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (1997-2002). As an academic (Trinity College Law Faculty, 1968-90), legislator (Senator, 1969-89) and barrister (1967-90; Senior Counsel, 1980; English Bar, 1973) she has always sought to use law as an instrument for social change, arguing landmark cases before the European Court of Human Rights as well as in the Irish courts and the European Court in Luxemburg.

In 1988, she and her husband founded the Irish Centre for European Law at the Trinity College. Ten years later, she was elected Chancellor of the University. Robinson is a member of the Royal Irish Academy and the American Philosophical Society and, since 2002, has been Honorary President of Oxfam International. A founding member and Chair of the Council of Women World Leaders, she serves on many boards including the Vaccine Fund, and chairs the Irish Chamber Orchestra. Robinson is also leading a new project, the Ethical Globalization Initiative (EGI), which aims to bring the norms and standards of human rights into the globalization process and support capacity building and good governance in developing countries, with an initial focus on Africa.

APF Continues to Raise Awareness of Homosexuality

LISA BOWLEG, PH.D.

In 2004, the APF awarded six researchers Wayne F. Placek Investigator Development Awards, between $3,000 and $4,000 each, for their scholarly work in helping to increase the understanding and awareness of homosexuality.

Lisa Bowleg, PhD, associate psychology professor at the University of Rhode Island, was awarded monies to investigate how black lesbian, gay and bisexual people in Philadelphia construct and maintain their social identities. Bowleg is the recipient of the 1999 Louise Kidder Early Career Award from APA's Div. 9 (Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues) and held a 1999-2001 visiting professorship at the Center for AIDS Prevention Studies at the University of California, San Francisco.

LESLIE W. CRAGIN, PH.D.

Leslie E. Cragin, PhD, assistant clinical professor in the University of California, San Francisco's department of obstetrics, gynecology and reproductive sciences, received funding to study postpartum depression (PPD) among lesbians and their partners. Cragin's research will specifically address the incidence, patterns and magnitude of PPD during a four-month period for each mother and her partner. She will also examine how social support, discrimination and partner relationship quality are related to other known risk factors for PPD. Cragin is the director of Nurse-Midwives of San Francisco and was recently elected to the American College of Nurse-Midwives' board of directors.

MELANIE C. STEFFENS

Michelle "Mikki" Hebl, PhD, associate psychology professor at Rice University, will conduct research to assess and enhance diversity training regarding sexual orientation. Hebl's research focuses on workplace discrimination and the barriers stigmatized individuals face in social interactions, the hiring process, business settings and the medical community. She has published more than 40 articles and book chapters on such topics and is also the recipient of six campus teaching awards.

Melanie A. Morrison, PhD, assistant professor in the University of Saskatchewan's applied social psychology department, was awarded funding to study explicit and implicit measures of prejudice toward gay men and lesbian women. Morrison's research interests include modern prejudice and discrimination, male body image, scale development and validation, and program evaluation.

Ann M. Ryan, PhD, professor of organizational psychology at Michigan State University, will develop both a psychometrically sound measure of sexual orientation harassment in the workplace and a measure of perceived workplace tolerance of sexual orientation harassment. Ryan's research focuses on fairness in the workplace and employee selection. She currently serves as editor of Personnel Psychology and is a fellow and past-president of APA's Div. 14 (Society for Industrial and Organizational Psychology).

Melanie C. Steffens, Doctor of Science, psychology professor at the Friedrich-Schiller-University in Germany, will investigate heterosexual societies' comfort with same-sex attractions. The study will extend existing models to include measurements of automatic or implicit internalized homonegativity. Steffens will then measure that implicit homonegativity and its relationship with self-esteem, lesbian or gay identification and psychological well-being, using German and multinational samples. Steffens has been the chair of the Association of Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Psychologies Europe and was a visiting fellow at Yale University in 2001.

Platt is 2005 Gerson Grant Recipient

LISA F. PLATT

Lisa F. Platt, a counseling psychology doctoral student at Pennsylvania State University, is the recipient of the 2005 APF Randy Gerson Memorial Grant, which was created to advance the systemic understanding of couple and/or family dynamics and/or multi-generational processes. Sylvia Shellenberger, Ph.D. established the grant in memory of her late husband, Randy Gerson.

"I'm honored to have been chosen for the Gerson Memorial Grant, and am excited and privileged to have the opportunity to further the work of Dr. Gerson," Platt said. Platt will use the funding to apply the family genogram in the investigation of differential family emotional processes in maltreating and non-maltreating families. In particular, she will be looking for differences in levels and patterns of cutoff, conflict, and symptoms in both the nuclear family and across generations.

Platt received her Masters of Education in Marriage and Family Therapy from the University of Oregon. Before pursuing her doctorate, she worked as a child and family therapist in Eugene, OR.

The grant alternates each year between a graduate student and a professional. The 2006 Gerson grant will be awarded to a professional. For more information, visit www.apa.org/apf/gerson.html.

APF Honors Life Achievement in Psychology

JAMES J. GALLAGHER, Ph.D.

James J. Gallagher, Ph.D.

Dr. Gallagher is the recipient of the 2005 APF Gold Medal Award for Life Achievement in Psychology in the Public Interest. He is currently Kenan professor of education at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. He is a past president of the Council for Exceptional Children, National Association for Gifted Children, and the World Council for Gifted and Talented Children. His numerous awards include the J. Wallace Wallin Award from the Council for Exceptional Children, the John Fogarty Award for Excellence in Government Service and the Lifetime Achievement Award from the National Association for Gifted Children.

Citation—For being our nation's premier scholar in the fields of giftedness and developmental disabilities. James J. Gallagher impacted national policies in both areas when he served as Associate Commissioner of Education in the U.S. Office of Education, and Chief of the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped. He was a pioneer and remains a leading figure in the relatively new discipline of Child Development and Social Policy, a field characterized by efforts to apply knowledge of human development to creating policies for children and families. He was Director and continues to work at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Center, a leading Center in the study of early education and child-care. In that position, he has influenced the many enlightened children's policies now found in North Carolina, and copied by many other states.

HOWARD LEVENTHAL, Ph.D.

Howard Leventhal, Ph.D.

Dr. Leventhal is the recipient of the 2005 APF Gold Medal Award for Life Achievement in the Science of Psychology. He is currently a professor at the Institute for Health, Policy & Aging Research at Rutgers University. In collaboration with investigators at Mt. Sinai and the Robert Wood Johnson Schools of Medicine, he is also directing a newly funded NIH Center for the Study of Health Beliefs and Behavior. The center's studies will develop and test models describing the conditions under which practitioners are able to infer patients' mental models of illness and treatment and identify the processes for helping them to use experience to bring their models into correspondence with biological reality.

Outstanding Achievement

Citation—For conducting systematic studies that created new theoretical models of the cognitive processes underlying representations of illness and treatment and relating these processes to emotion and behavior. The studies were among the first to identify parallel routes for cognitive and affective processing; action plans for translating beliefs into behaviors; how preparation for and interpretation of symptoms facilitates adaptation to painful/noxious stimuli and cigarette addiction; the identification of heuristics for the construction of common-sense models of illness and treatment; and the processes underlying self assessments of health and how representations of illness and treatment affect the self system.

JEROME M. SATTLER, Ph.D.

Jerome M. Sattler, Ph.D.

Dr. Sattler is the recipient of the 2005 APF Gold Medal Award for Life Achievement in the Application of Psychology. He is currently professor emeritus and an adjunct professor at San Diego State University. Sattler's major publications include Assessment of Children and Clinical and Forensic Interviewing of Children and Families. In 1998, Sattler received the Senior Scientist Award from APA's Division of School Psychology (16). He is co-author of the Stanford-Binet Intelligence Scale—Fourth Edition and served as an expert witness in the Larry P. v. Wilson Riles case involving cultural bias of intelligence tests.

Citation—For a lifetime of distinguished contributions to the application of psychological measurement to the assessment of children, and to the education of a legion of applied and research psychologists. Jerome M. Sattler's textbooks on child assessment are internationally recognized as among psychology's most influential resources, and his research on assessment has been exemplary. His name alone evokes good testing practice. He possesses a rare combination of intelligence, clarity of thought, flexibility, patience, creativity, and excellent writing ability. His contributions to the fields of clinical and school psychology have been unparalleled, and his work has indelibly benefited psychological science and practice.

A. EUGENE SHAPIRO, Ph.D.

A. Eugene Shapiro, Ph.D.

Dr. Shapiro is the recipient of the 2005 APF Gold Medal Award for Life Achievement in the Practice of Psychology. Prior to his retirement in 2005, Shapiro was a professor and associate dean at Nova Southeastern University in Fort Lauderdale, FL. He is former governor of the APA College of Professional Psychology and was elected to the National Academies of Practice as a distinguished practitioner in psychology in 1983. In 2004, he received the Outstanding Contributions to RxP Education Award from the American Society for the Advancement of Psychopharmacology (55).

Citation—For being a pioneer of private practice in New Jersey and leading many efforts critical to the firm establishment of psychology as a major health profession in local, state and national venues. A. Eugene Shapiro assumed the key leadership role in obtaining the first state Freedom-of-Choice Insurance law for psychologists in New Jersey in 1968 and played a key role in securing the inclusion of psychologists under the definition of "physician" in the federal workers' compensation program. He was an organizing founder of a small group of activists, known as the "Dirty Dozen," who have been recognized for their successful efforts to fully integrate professional psychologists into the organizational structure of APA. He holds a record of leadership on the APA Board of Directors, the APA Council of Representatives, and numerous other boards and committees, and he served on the committee whose efforts led to the founding of the Graduate School of Applied and Professional Psychology at Rutgers University, the first university-based such school in the country.

Thomas Ludwig honored for teaching excellence

THOMAS E. LUDWIG, Ph.D.

APF will honor Thomas E. Ludwig, Ph.D., with its 2005 Charles L. Brewer Award for Distinguishing Teaching of Psychology at the APA/APF awards ceremony on Friday, Aug. 19, during APA's 2005 Annual Convention in Washington, DC.

Ludwig received his PhD in human development and aging from Washington University in St. Louis in 1977. Since then he has been a faculty member at Hope College, where he teaches courses in developmental psychology, gerontology and introductory psychology and conducts research on developmental neuropsychology, with a particular focus on hemispheric specialization and interhemispheric collaboration via the corpus callosum.

Computer technology has played a major role throughout Ludwig's career. He wrote his first computer program in 1970, and in 1978 and 1981 he received grants from the National Institute of Mental Health and the National Science Foundation to purchase microcomputers for use in his research on cognitive aging. He has been heavily involved in computer-assisted instruction both in and out of the classroom. He has organized faculty-training programs at Hope, developed and taught Hope's first online course in 1999 and assisted in implementing a campus-wide course management system.

In 1984, Ludwig began work on PsychSim, a set of 12 interactive simulations and demonstrations for introductory psychology classrooms. An expanded version called PsychSim II won the 1990 EDUCOM/NCRIPAL Higher Education Software Award for Best Psychology Software. PsychSim 5, released in 2004, has now grown to 42 activities and is in use at hundreds of universities around the world. At APA's 2005 Annual Convention in Washington, DC, Ludwig will deliver his Distinguished Teaching of Psychology Award Address, "Ten things I've learned from teaching psychology," on Saturday, Aug. 20, at 2 p.m. in room 144A of the Washington Convention Center.

Laura A. Feagans, a doctoral student in developmental psychology at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill. Her current research focuses on social aggression in girls' peer relations over their transition to high school and how this influences the manner in which girls cope with peer-related stressors and their psychological adjustment.

Jessica S. Horst, a doctoral candidate working with Dr. Larissa Samuelson in the department of psychology at the University of Iowa. The focus of her work is on categorization and language acquisition, specifically on how children learn names for objects.

Nicole R. Nugent, a fourth-year graduate student in child clinical psychology at Kent State University. Nugent is completing research investigating psychophysiological predictors of PTSD in pediatric injury. Findings from this research have led to her dissertation, a double-blind placebo-controlled randomized trial of propranolol toward prevention of PTSD in children exposed to trauma.

The Koppitz fellowships and travel stipends are made possible by a generous bequest by Werner F. Koppitz, Ph.D. in memory of his wife, Elizabeth Munsterberg Koppitz, Ph.D. For more information, visit www.apa.org/apf/koppitz.html.
