APA President's Program: The Rainbow Project: What's Wrong With College Admissions and How Psychology Can Fix It

Robert J. Sternberg, PhD, and the Rainbow Project Collaborators have created a test to augment the SAT that (a) increases prediction of college success and (b) simultaneously reduces differences between ethnic groups. The test, based on the theory of successful intelligence, measures analytical, creative, and practical skills through conventional plus performance assessments. Dr. Sternberg will discuss (a) why there is a need for new tests for college admissions, (b) what forms these tests can take, (c) how they can simultaneously increase construct validity, in general, and predictive validity, in particular, and (d) why they increase equity in the admissions process and how they could potentially increase representation of underrepresented minorities in college entering classes.
