“Barely a year and a half after its debut, Coursera, a startup launched by Stanford faculty, reports that about 4.4 million students have signed up. The MIT-Harvard MOOC called edX, which four months later, had more than a million...

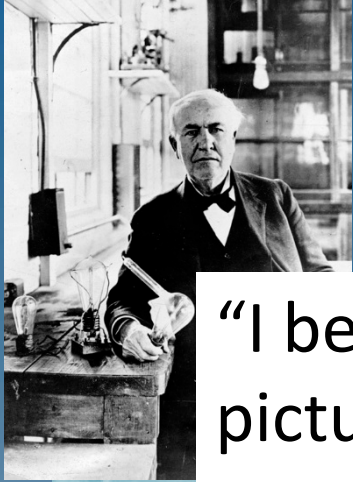

percent of people who take MOOCs fail to complete them. Providers acknowledge.”

(All hail MOOCs! Just don't ask if they actually work).

“Flipped”

New

MOOCs and interactive, "flipped" classrooms are two disruptive innovations that fit like hand and glove. We are on the cusp of an educational tsunami: Super teachers will provide instruction to hundreds of thousands or even millions of students as homework; the next morning, their classroom teachers will coach students through problem solving in interactive, "flipped" classrooms. 07/27/2012
