

ESSENTIAL SCIENCE CONVERSATIONS

Your Science Can Affect Policy: How and Why Psychological Scientists Should Engage in Advocacy

October 25, 2022

Related Resources

APA Current Advocacy Priorities

Learn about the current advocacy priorities of APA and access related resources at

<https://www.apaservices.org/advocacy/actions/advocacy-priorities>

Advocacy Newsletter

APA Advocacy Washington Update is a newsletter that highlights how APA is working to advance the discipline and practice of psychology on Capitol Hill and beyond.

Subscribe to the newsletter and access prior articles at https://www.apaservices.org/advocacy/newsletter/?_ga=2.58220714.1407636290.1666718189-130666775.1550924104

Federal Funding for Psychological Science

APA Services advocates for robust and predictable funding of psychological research at the federal science agencies. Learn more at

<https://www.apaservices.org/advocacy/federal-funding>

Promoting and Defending Research

APA Services strongly encourages the use of psychological science in policy-making decisions and vigorously defends the field from ideological attacks. Learn more at

<https://www.apaservices.org/advocacy/promoting-defending-research>

APA's Science Spotlight

Subscribe to Science Spotlight, your source for the most relevant news and information for psychological scientists, by psychological scientists:

www.apa.org/science/science-spotlight

APA Editor's Choice Newsletter

Keep up with top research findings in psychological science by subscribing to the Editor's Choice newsletter at www.apa.org/news/editors-choice/