ABUSE OF WOMEN WITH DISABILITIES

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . .

► Women with disabilities have a 40% greater chance of intimate partner violence than women without disabilities?

Women with disabilities may experience unique forms of abuse that are difficult to recognize—making it even harder to get the kind of help they need. Such abuse may include:

► Removing or destroying a person’s mobility devices (e.g., wheelchairs, scooters, walkers)
► Preventing access to food
► Inappropriately touching a person while assisting with bathing and/or dressing
► Denying access to disability-related resources in the community and/or to health care appointments
► Forcing someone to take medication against her will
► Forcing someone to lie in soiled undergarments

TYPES OF ABUSE

Abuse is not always easy to identify, but it can help to learn about the different kinds of abuse:

- Physical abuse (e.g., hitting, slapping, and/or restraining)
- Sexual abuse (e.g., forcing someone to engage in sexual acts)
- Verbal abuse (e.g., name calling, cursing)
- Emotional abuse (e.g., isolating someone from friends and family, humiliating or ignoring a person)
- Financial exploitation (e.g., taking and/or controlling a person’s money)

WHERE DOES ABUSE OCCUR AND BY WHOM?

Abuse can occur anywhere—but more often when a woman has limited access to help or witnesses. Abusers can be:

- Caregivers
- Family members
- Transportation providers
- Intimate partners
- Personal care attendants and other disability support providers

GETTING HELP

Getting help and reporting the abuser is not easy. Women with disabilities often do not report their abuser because:

- Signs of abuse may not be apparent to others
- They may feel embarrassed, guilty, or ashamed
- They may fear losing their home or independence, especially if the abuser is the caregiver and/or intimate partner
- They may not know where to get help—or help may not be easy to get

- Communication barriers may stand in the way, especially for deaf women
- Service providers often have limited knowledge about disability needs and abuse
- The abuser may be well known and respected

ALSO CONSIDER CONTACTING AND/OR TELLING:

- Adult Protective Services
- Your doctor
- Your psychologist or counselor
- Your local disability resource center

WHAT YOU CAN DO

If you know someone who is being abused or if you are being abused, it is important to know there is HELP. But you may need to be open to a team approach to help you connect with local agencies addressing both disability and abuse.

ORGANIZATIONS THAT CAN HELP

SAFETY PLANNING

- Connect with supportive and caring people, not those who might blame you for the abuse.
- Secure a restraining or protective order if necessary—it prohibits an individual from harassing, threatening, approaching, accosting, or even contacting you. Always keep it with you.
- Seek help from a psychologist or other licensed mental health provider; contact your doctor or other primary health care provider; engage the services at centers or shelters for battered women.
- If possible, have a phone handy at all times and know what numbers to call for help.
- Don’t be afraid to call the police.
- Pack a bag (include money, an extra set of keys, copies of important documents, extra clothes and medicines) and leave it in a safe place or with someone you trust. Don’t forget to consider critical disability-related devices and/or aids.
- Let trusted friends and neighbors know of your situation, and develop a plan and visual signal for when you need help.
- Teach your children how to get help. Instruct them not to get involved in the violence between you and your partner. Plan a code word or sign to signal to them that they should get help or leave the house.
- Practice how to get out safely. Practice with your children.
